Agatha Christie was one of England's most famous writers. Her crime and detective stories became famous for their clever plots. Agatha Christie was born in Devon, England in 1890. Her father was a British army captain. During the First World War she worked in a hospital as a nurse. Later on she got a job in a pharmacy. This influenced many of her crime stories because some of her victims were poisoned.

Agatha Christie travelled a lot with her second husband. Some of her novels, like "Death on the Nile" were set in the Middle East. "Murder on the Orient Express" was written in Istanbul. When she died in 1976 she had written over 60 novels, 150 short stories and 16 plays. Her stage play "The Mousetrap" was first performed in 1952 and after a record 23,000 performances it is still running today. Many of her books and short stories have been turned into successful movies.

Agatha Christie created two great characters. Hercule Poirot is a Belgian detective who appeared in 33 of Agatha Christie's novels. Poirot thinks logically and likes order. He examines the crime scene in detail and claims that every crime can be solved. Agatha Christie's other famous character was Miss Marple, an old woman who wants to be an amateur detective.

Almost all of her novels are about English people of the middle and upper classes. The detective questions the suspects, examines the crime scene carefully and gives the reader clues so that they may have a chance to solve the crime themselves. Finally the detective gets all the suspects together and gives away information that not everyone knows, until the real murderer is revealed.
